

A day at the hospital

Mike O'Callaghan Federal Hospital does it all -- surgery, diagnostics, dental exams, physicals...

Above, Staff Sgt. Adam Milder, 99th Medical Group, checks the height and weight on Airman 1st Class Jennifer Prestage, 99th Medical Group, as part of her annual physical health assessment conducted during each military member's birth month.
Right, Capt. Dawn Werner, 99th Medical Group, demonstrates non-contact tonometry, measuring the pressure in the eye. This is one of the ways to check for abnormalities in the eye.
Below, Jordan Hodges, 2, gets his blood pressure checked by Airman Carly Cone, 99th Medical Group, as his mom, Ms. Diana Hodges, watches.

Right, Alex Hauf, 11, son of Capt. Lawrence Prince, 414th Test and Evaluation Squadron, grimaces as Staff Sgt. Chet Bangs, 99th Medical Group, takes some blood. The procedure was over in less than a minute.

Below left, Staff Sgt. David Satchell, 99th Dental Squadron, performs a checkup on Capt. John McDermott, 99th Medical Group. Dental exams should be scheduled regularly.
Below, Senior Airman Kris Robertson prepares the CAT scan for another patient. The Mike O'Callaghan Federal Hospital has some of the most advanced medical imaging equipment in Air Combat Command.

Left, Senior Airman DeMoyn Faison, medical technician, sits ready to respond. As part of his duties, he can screen patients, administer an IV and perform CPR as well as drive an ambulance.
